The Crab Orchard Springs were sold last week for $22,535. The place cost its late owner $164,000.

The house of A. T. Stewart & Co., at New York, has discontinued business. The step, it is said, is made necessary by Judge Hilton's bad management.

JUDGE ALVIN DUVALL and Hon. Richard Reed, are spoken of for Judge of the superior court, under the provisions of the bill establishing such a tribunal, lately passed by the legislature.

Among the bills passed by the House on Saturday was one to incorporate the Robert M. Owens Lodge F. A. M. at Tollesboro, Lewis county, and another for the benefit of John F. Pollett of that county.

The bill before the Ohio Legislature known as the Smith Sunday Bill, has passed both houses and is now a law of the state. Under its provisions all places where intoxicating liquors are sold or exposed for sale are required to be closed on the sabbath day. There was much opposition to the measure, especially in Cincinnati, but it passed the Legislature, nevertheless by a vote of sixty-eight to thirty-one.

The Yeoman says: We have refrained from any reference to the charges made by the Louisville Commercial against Capt. Thos. J. Henry, the Democratic nominee for Clerk of the Court of Appeals, because we have not been properly informed concerning them. It is now our understanding that Capt. Henry will appear in his own defense at an early day, and until then we ask the Democrats of the State to suppress any expression of opinion. He is entitled to be heard, and should not be judged until he is heard. His statement will be published before the middle of the week.

MRS. JESSE JAMES TALKS.

She Thinks if Jesse Had Been Let Alone He Would Have Been "An Honor to His Country."

Kansas City Journal.

Yesterday afternoon the wife of Jesse James was visited by a Journal representative, to whom she gave some interesting statements concerning those with whom she has been associated in past years. Mrs. James did not go to Kearney Tuesday night, as stated by a morning contemporary. The woman was found at the residence of her sister, Mrs. McBride, living on East Seventeenth street. There, with her two children Mrs. James is now stopping. She, who has received so much newspaper notoriety of late, through the actions of her husband, is a woman presenting rather a pleasing appearance. The woman is of the blonde type. Yesterday she was dressed in mourning. With her were her two children, a boy and a girl of tender years. The former is a handsome little fellow, and showing by his countenance that he is possessed of more intelligence than lads of his age. The little girl looks like her mother. In the room with the little ones were other children amusing themselves with one of those weapons which are a terror to everybody, a bean-flipper.

Mrs. James offered no objection to an interview. She spoke of the Ford boys, who killed her husband, and expressed herself in harsh terms of their action. She stated that last fall Charley Ford had come to her husband while he was visiting his mother. Ford said that he was fleeing from officers, and asked to be protected. Oftentimes he had protected Jesse, and the latter proposed on this occasion to befriend him. Shortly after Jesse intended removing his family to St. Joseph, and there, he said, Charles Ford, with his brother Bob, could live and be safe.

When Mrs. James spoke of the action of the boys in killing her husband, she called them traitors. Then referring to their victim with tears in her eyes, and a voice affected with emotion, she said: "I know that Frank and Jessie have done wrong, but they have not been guilty of all with which they have been charged. Jesse was as kind to me as he could be; and for those children he got everything they asked for. He was a reticent man, and never told me where he intended going, but I always had an idea what he was doing. There's one thing certain, what I do know of Jesse will never be made public. I'll go to my grave without telling anything. The Ford boys told that Jesse intended robbing a bank the night that he was killed. That is not so. I know for a certainty that he never contemplated any such thing. When Jesse was home he always did what he could about the house. The day that he was shot he had been with me in the kitchen all the morning, until he went into room with the boys. I was sick at the time, and he helped me because it wasn't safe to hire a girl. Besides, we couldn't afford it. There are some people who believe that I have loads of money. That is not true. Only a few hundred dollars were left me.

When Jesse read that Dick Little had surrendered he said that Dick was a traitor and ought to be hung, and he was a traitor, too. Jesse used to get the papers regularly. When the train robbery was committed in Arkansas, he read it the next morning. He was charged by the papers with being connected with it. When he read it he said that he hoped the real robbers would be caught, and then the people would see that he was not connected with every robbery. When that was committed we were living on Troost avenue, in this city. We had previously lived on Ninth street and Woodland avenue, and I remained one week at the Daggett House. Jesse wasn't with me there however. Kansas City was the safest place we could get into, for people would not suspect us of living here. St. Joseph was a safe place also. We lived there nearly a year, and Jesse went all over the town. When we were living here no one knew of our presence except my brother, who clerks in the city. My sister didn't even know it. Jesse used to often visit his mother. He told me after his return on one trip that he had gotten on the train at the bridge depot. When the conductor came along he noticed that he had one finger off. Upon coming back the second time Jesse said he stopped him and asked him if he was not Jesse James, telling him that Jesse was minus a finger. When making these trips he was very prudent, and always careful to avoid officers. The Sunday before he was shot he told me that he wanted to go to his mother's home as soon as possible to see Johnnie, who was shot some time since.

Last winter Jesse told me that he wanted to settle down on a farm. We couldn't ever keep in one place, though, the officers were always after us. We lived at Nashville two years under the name of Howard, and then were driven away. If they (officers) had just left Jesse alone, we would have lived right and Jesse would have been an honor to his country.

Of Frank's whereabouts Mrs. James had little to say. She stated that she had not seen him since last September, when he met his wife at their home on Troost avenue, in this city. It will be remembered that during last fall mention was made of the presence of Frank's wife at the St. James. Then it was that she met her husband. Soon after, the two, according to Mrs. Jesse James, left for California. Jesse's wife stated that never a line of any kind was passed between the two brothers, as it was not considered safe. They often met, however. The story that Frank was at Jesse's burial was considered by Mrs. James absurd. She said Frank had too much sense to expose himself in that crowd.

Mrs. James had nothing to say upon the probabilities of her husband's death being avenged.

She will remain in the city for the present, making her home with her sister.

BATCHELDER'S Ventilated Egg Case.

Patented February 15, 1881.

Indispensible to Merchants Shippers And Producers.

The outside frame of this carrier contains five trays, held in place by fasteners at end of case, as seen in cut. These Trays are constructed in reversible halves. The above cut shows one whole tray filled ready to be placed in case, each egg resting in its cardboard socket in such a manner as to be readily counted, candled, or transferred from tray to tray, or case to case, without rehandling.

For cold storage this case will store 60 dozen with racks made to receive the half trays, hence this is the cheapest storage case manufactured, saving largely in space.

The manner of holding the eggs on end prevents oscillation, adding, or breaking, and adds greatly to their freshness when carried long in storage. Size of 30 dozen No. 1 cases 25x12x14, weighs 20 pounds.
